This folk tale, passed down through the generations, tells the story of the little red hen that works hard for her bread. At each stage of the bread making, from planting to baking, she asks for help from the other farm animals. But when no one offers to help, the little red hen does the work herself. Of course, after the bread is baked, all of the farm animals offer to help the little red hen eat the bread; but since they did not help in the making, they do not get to help in the eating.
